

R. H. Pratt has been having a bad time the past few days. He scratched his thumb a few days ago and did not think much about it until one day it commenced to swell up and pain him and then kept spreading up his arm—blood poisoning having set in, and for a day or two the doctors had quite a time to get it checked. We are pleased to hear that he is improving.