

Mrs. W. T. McCulloch.

This community was grieved and shocked last Thursday on learning of the death of Mrs. W. T. McCulloch, who died at St. Johns hospital at Fargo.

Mrs. McCulloch was taken sick on Thursday, January 7th, with appendicitis and grew rapidly worse in spite of what the local doctors could do for her, and on the 15th she was taken to Fargo to the hospital. Before taking her there Mr. McCulloch wanted to have Dr. Darrow or any other prominent surgeon brought to the home and have the operation there, but as Mrs. McCulloch had taken such a rapid turn and was in a very serious condition the local doctors in charge thought it best to have her taken to Fargo and the start was made. Enroute she grew worse and sank rapidly. When the hospital was reached all that the skill of the doctors there could suggest was done, but without avail, and the end came at 12:35 January 16, 1908.

Mrs. McCulloch was loved and admired by a large circle of friends and acquaintances. She was always steadfast and true to everyone with whom she came in contact, a kind neighbor and a warm and faithful friend, always mindful of the comforts and needs of others and the best of wives and mothers; and it was indeed sad that she could not have ended this earthly career at home, surrounded by her loved ones and comforted by their tender care.

Sarah Ann Sansburn was born January 24, 1848, near St. Marys, Ont., and was married to W. T. McCulloch in 1867 at the same place. In 1880 Mr. McCulloch came to Griggs county and was joined the following spring by his wife and they have lived ever since on the farm at Jessie. To them were born four sons and two daughters—James, William, Graham, Norm, Lizzie and Maggie, now Mrs. G. A. Pratt and Mrs. Joseph Bailey, respectively, all of whom, with the husband, survive her. Mrs. McCulloch was a
