

The auction sale held by J. F. Van Voorhis & Co., Tuesday was not as much of a success as it might have been had the weather not been quite so cool. The music furnished by the band was of a high standard as usual, but the standard was not as high as it could have been if Jack Frost had not been so promiscuous in the band. The clarinet players looked as though they were sucking icicles, and the cornets and other instruments gave forth sounds like unto the vibrations of paper sacks. The reason of it all was that the instruments were all frozen up, and if the crowd will come in some day when the weather is warmer, the boys will redeem themselves.
