

The Primary Election in Binford was rather quiet, partly because there was not much opposition and partly because the voters did not all turn out. However, the election is now over and in a few days we may know who has been nominated. There appears to be a whole lot of red tape about that new Primary Law, but after we get used to it or get another in its stead, we will become more attached to the process of choosing officers.