OVERFLOW TIMELETS

DIED—Johnnie Jacobson aged ten years, died at the family home near Red Willow lake, on Monday morning at 5 o'clock. Appendicitis is said to have been the cause of death, he having suffered from the disease for about a week. The funeral takes place today from the home and the remains will be laid to rest in Bethlehem Cemetery. The sorrowing relatives have the sympathy of all in their trouble.

Charles H. Detwiler, working in the employ of F. G. Lewis had a narrow escape from asphyxiation last Thursday night. He slept in the office of the Acme grain Co., and had a soft coal fire on all night. The stove door was not securely fastened and early next morning he awoke to find the room full of gas and to find himself very sick from a miserable headache. He got up and opened the office door to let in fresh air and shortly after he fainted and fell to the floor. After a while he became partially conscious and dragged himself to the bed where he lay until agent Vogen came and assisted him to the Maurer Hotel where he procured a room for the day and until he recovered from the gas. It was a close call, but Mr. Detwiler is now at work again and is apparently none the worse for the experience.

Says Ritchie, Smartly.

Franklin Ritchie of "The Clansman" company went to a popular restaurant the other day and ordered some lamb chops. When they were served he found that they were very tough. He called the waiter and asked:

"Are you sure that these are lamb chops and not mutton?"

"Oh, yes, those are lamb chops," replied the waiter.

"Ah," replied Ritchie, "a case of
