

B. A. Hermanson has a claim in the Allerta country, and will soon depart for there to remain permanently. At the present time his claim is one hundred miles from town, but he thinks that the railroad which is reported to have been started through the country will go within about six miles of his farm. He tells there are lots of wild animals there, including black bear, timber wolves, coyotes, etc., which make it a very desirable place for those who are fond of excitement, altho they do not bother human beings if not provoked.

We have discussed why no one
