
Joe Ingle's 13-year-old son came near meeting with a terrible death the other day near Wabpeton. The boy was in the pasture when he was attacked by a bull. The boy was knocked down, and was pitched, bunted and pounded until he was rescued by a little brother, who seized a pitchfork and attacked the animal. When the boy attacked the bull the boy on the ground had locked the fingers of both hands in the bull's nostrills and the enraged animal was walking backward dragging the plucky little fellow over the ground.—
The Evening Times Record.
