

T. O. Torgerson met with a slight accident Sunday. A colt was trying to break from the pasture and Mr. Torgerson went out to hold up some wires that were down to prevent the animal from getting out. The colt plunged into the wire and so twisted them around in the act as to cut Mr. Torgerson's hand quite badly. The colt got out and Mr. T. went to the house and wrapped his fingers in turpentine after which he attempted to light his pipe, with the result that the fumes of the turpentine filled the air immediately surrounding to such an extent that it ignited and there was a fire to fight to escape further injury. However, the fire was simply the burning of the clothes around the hand and after that was extinguished the danger seemed past. The wire cuts are not serious and Mr. Torgerson will not be seriously inconvenienced on that account.
