

The N. P. freight going north Sunday night narrowly escaped being wrecked about a mile south of Jessie. A box car had been blown out of the switch at Jessie and had gone down the track about a mile when the freight train going about thirty miles an hour, struck it. Luckily the engine kept the track but the pilot and front of the engine were badly stove in. The fireman and brakeman jumped, the former spraining his ankle in doing so.

Word of the marriage of Miss