

Andrew Nordstrum and four of his men, including John Hegberg, Gus Lind and two others, very narrowly escaped serious injury yesterday forenoon while working on the new residence of R. B. Vogen. They were upon a scaffold fourteen feet from the ground and had 4000 shingles with them upon the scaffold when it broke loose and fell letting them all descend by a most rapid route to the ground, and not a man was injured except Mr. Nordstrum who found a shingle nail concealed under the skin of his hand when he recovered enough of himself to size up the situation, - and John Hegberg reported that his neck was broken, but as he is still working the same as before it looks as though John is a joker or else a little thing like a broken neck doesn't bother him as much as it does some people. The boys consider themselves pretty lucky by having escaped without injury to any of them, and well they might.