

Cole's Flyer Meets Death.

Monday evening some dogs aggravated a horse of D. A. Goplen's which was hitched to a post, by biting and snapping at his heels and of course the horse became very nervous and made several attempts to get away. Finding he could not get loose he resorted to his only natural method of defense and began to kick at the dogs and Cole's Flyer, a noted Bull Terrier belonging to Druggist Lockett, being among the number, was kicked in the head and died a short time afterward. This dog was a good specimen of the bull terrier breed and had won four prizes for his perfect markings, and it cost Mr. Lockett considerable money to get the dog and have him shipped here, so we all know how to feel for George in the financial loss which he has thus sustained.
