

Mail Carrier Henry W. Nelson was mixed up in a runaway last Monday morning while starting out on his duties that his left arm was broken and his right shoulder besides getting his rubber tired buggy smashed to pieces. He was driving out of town when Clarence McCulloch came along with the butcher shop delivery cart. The horse that Clarence was driving stumbled into the team that Nelson was driving. This scared the mail team and they ran away, throwing the carrier with considerable force against a post near the fair grounds. No bones were broken but Hank has a very lame arm as a result. The mail was scattered around, but none was lost. The buggy looks like a kindling pile.

—Courier.