

where he has assurances of a good position. Jack made a great many friends during his residence here. As a workman he is an expert in his line and made himself almost indispensable to his employers.

Oscar Greenland and F. G. Lewis were at Cooperstown last Thursday. They started home in the former's auto just as the train was pulling into Cooperstown and conceived the idea of beating it to Binford. They didn't—but were only two miles behind—making the run in the record time of 32 minutes.

A man with an over-abundance of joy water went on a rampage last night in the third story of the Maurer hotel, kicking over the lamp and setting fire to the room. Mr. Maurer phoned for Policeman Amundson and the man was given a night's lodging in the village lockup. When he comes out of his stupor he will be given a hearing in Justice Gunderson's court. The room in the hotel is black from smoke and Mr. Maurer had quite a tussle in extinguishing the flame.

A deal was made this week which will cause general regret in and around Binford. R. B. Vogen has disposed of his residence property to Adolph Retzlaff, a farmer near Jessie, and expects to move to Canada shortly after the first of the year, where he has an excellent opening in the grain business. The Vogens are among the first residents of Binford and are popular in social circles of the village, and the announcement of their intended departure will cause much regret.

It looks now as though the long, dry, hot spell which has been general for two weeks over the northwest has completely collapsed. The weather turned cold Friday and in the evening another drizzling rain similar to that of Thursday evening fell. The rains, according to the best information obtainable, were general from the far north in Canada to the gulf and even down into Mexico. However, the weather up to date this fall has been so nearly ideal that a little snappy fall weather will not be unrelished by a large number of North Dakota people.

Chris Kolberg received the sad news yesterday of the death of his young daughter, Eli, at a hospital in Minneapolis. The little girl was in the hospital for treatment for diphtheria and was recovering rapidly when other complications set in, death coming Tuesday. It is a particularly sad affair, as Mrs. Kolberg was expected home in a short time from a visit with her parents in Minneapolis. The little one
