

freezes up.

E. J. Blystad was found dead in his hovel last Friday forenoon by Sheriff Knaupp who broke in the door. Blystad had not been seen for several days (since Monday, we believe,) and as there was a stench about the place, noticed by those who chanced to pass, the officer thought it wise to investigate—with the result above stated. The body was in a shocking state, and it is thought that he must have been dead at least three or four days. Blystad lived alone. He had been a resident of Cooperstown for a long time. Whether he had any relatives is not known.—Sentinel.

The announcement that the