

Ludvig Amundson had the misfortune to lose part of his index finger on the left hand Monday. He was digging rock in the road north of town when the accident happened. In fastening a chain around a rock so the team could pull it out, the chain slipped when the horses began to pull, catching his finger under the chain. The flesh was so badly torn that a part of the finger had to be amputated.