

The directors of the First National bank held their annual meeting Tuesday and the business for the past year was checked over and found to be very satisfactory. No change was made in the directors or officers except that N. E. Greenland was promoted to the office of assistant cashier, a worthy and well-earned promotion. Much is due Cashier Greenland for the prosperous condition and stability of this popular banking institution, and that the directors know and appreciate this fact is shown by giving him a substantial increase in salary. A good-sized dividend was declared.
