

The Times wishes to announce to its readers that as soon as its serial story is completed, the number of pages will be decreased. We are forced to do this on account of the prohibitive prices charged for patent insides. The prices for these patent adless pages have increased so much that unless they are cut out, the price of subscription would have to be advanced, and rather than raise the subscription rate the publishers of the state have combined to fight the ready-print trust. The Times has not been affected by the advanced rates because we have allowed the newspaper union to run advertising on our inside pages, but we realize that without the co-operation of all the papers in the state or at least a large percentage of them, the fight for our just rights would be unsuccessful. The readers should remember they will receive the same amount of home news as before. We ask you to bear with us in this fight. It's up to you, and with your assistance we can beat 'em to a stand still.
