

Binford will have an opportunity to make a reputation for herself next Thursday evening. F. C. Roeckman has secured a splendid attraction in the "Maid and the Minister," a play on a par with the "The Wolf," "The Price," "The Climax" and "Paid in Full." The play is a story on the "Divorce Question of Today." Binford people should make it a point to take this play in. There is no other one thing that will give a town a black eye quicker than poor attendance at a good show and the travelling show troupes have a way of spreading this information. Binford has been without any travelling shows on account of the opera house being closed and this state of affairs has existed over two years. During that time our reputation as a good show town has been injured, but if we show the proper spirit now the news will soon spread and Binford will get all the good shows that have visited the towns around us, while we had to be contented with a look at the advertising matter. Much is at stake—now let's get out and make the most of it.
