

Chris Heinson was out to the Chas. Fiske auction sale Monday and purchased a Maxwell runabout. Mr. Heinson will use the machine to deliver the mail on the rural routes. Chris has driven his ponies so long that it will take him some time to get over the novelty of driving an auto. Tuesday, while he was going to his barn, he was telling a friend the good points about his car, and when nearing the fence around the barn yard, he gave the usual command to stop, but the blooming beast wouldn't whoa. Then he pulled on the steering wheel with the same result. Not until the wires were torn loose from the post could he get control of the thing. After he saw there was no damage done, he resumed his story about the good points; avering that there are no bad ones.
