

School Notes.

"Sprig has came and the liddle birds so sweedly sig." We are making the most of it. It is a pleasure to be able to play out of doors. We hope the weather man has not made a mistake, but that Spring has come to stay. Marbles have yielded their popularity to ball.

Examination week has come once more. How swiftly the time rolls around. This ends the seventh month of school.

We are grateful to Mrs. West for some interesting specimens of weathered rock, starfish and sea urchins.

Edna Sorvik was absent Monday.

The fourth and fifth grades are rejoicing in new readers,

Lilly Olsgard is on the sick list.

The following is a first grade reading lesson, prepared by Miss Pomeroy:

Miss Lowe likes to play ball.

Does the ball like Miss Lowe?

Yes, the ball does like Miss Lowe.

Did Miss Lowe bawl?

No, but she wanted to.

The Civics class is studying about the executive department of our state government.

Room II is mourning the loss of two more pupils lately. Melvin Melum and Albert Walen have left school, on account of change of residence.

Anna Glimsdahl and Sena Solberg are absent from their classes these days.

The third grade has memorized the poem, "March," by William Cullen Bryant and studied the selections "I Remember," by Thomas Hood and "My Shadow" by Robert Louis Stevenson.

The current events class had an interesting recitation Monday. We noted the number of delegates elected to date for the national nominating convention, the condition of affairs in Mexico, the reception given our secretary of state in Caracas, Venezuela, and many other items of interest.
