

way between the Morrison and Gutterman homes, they attempted to pass a team, travelling in the same direction. At that moment, Morrison's dog, following the team, started across the road in the path of the auto. Johnson, who was running at high speed, saw the impending clash and applied the brakes but the car hit the dog with terrific force, killing the animal instantly. The road is sandy at that point and the front wheels of the car jack-knifed, turning the car end for end and tipping it completely over, setting it on its wheels again. The occupants of the car were hurled to the ground with considerable force but aside from a few scratches and minor bruises, escaped injury. The car was badly damaged.
