

The Times is in receipt of a long and interesting letter from Theo. K. Curry. T. K. was inspired to write this letter, he says, for fear some of his creditors might be misled by a local that appeared in the Times of July 27, that the conditions out there were working hardships on many, compelling them to seek other lines of vocations and intimating that they were about to move. He says he has made no arrangements to move and does not know that he will. Judging from the letter, he is in that happy frame of mind that is so characteristic of him—even in face of the adverse conditions. We are going to take a chance of publishing the letter in full in our next issue. We don't know that Curry intended this but are going to take a long range shot at it just the same. It is very interesting.
