

Sentinel: C. J. Lucken lost a day last week. Friday evening he went to bed and did not appear at the Exchange hotel on Saturday for his meals, being as regular as a clock, he was missing and Saturday evening Officer Christianson, who happened to have a key that fitted, unlocked the door and found him unconscious in his bed in the room back of his office, where he has always slept when at home. Dr. Brimi was called and Mr. Lucken was soon brought to himself and is now seemingly none the worse off for his experience. Coal gas had escaped from the stove and he was slowly undergoing asphyxiation and had his condition not been discovered he would undoubtedly have passed away.
