

Novices in the tramp world, Geo. Briley and Arthur Nadler, met up with an experience in this city which will result in the adoption of new methods of mixing the "pot gang" coffee. Securing a syrup can which they filled with water and coffee, they placed the cover on securely, afterwards hanging it over the camp fire to boil. It boiled all right, but with such rapidity that the cover was blown off and one side ripped out, and both men were scalded as a result. Both men are being cared for in this city, and will recover, although their condition for a time was considered very serious.—Finley Reacon.
