

where in this issue.

Sigurd Olson met with an accident last Thursday which caused him considerable pain. He was using an engine to run the fanning mill and in reaching overhead to fix a belt on a pulley, his thumb got caught, dislocating it at the joint and lacerating it badly. It was feared that the injured member would have to be amputated, but with seven stitches it was sewed together and seems to be healing in fine shape.

Editor's Department: A number of