

Julius Peterson was a passenger on last Saturday's southbound train on his way to Moorhead to act as relief ticket clerk during the absence of the regular man. His job there was short-lived as older men in point of service "bumped" him. He returned to McHenry yesterday, to resume his old duties until another vacancy occurs.

The Herald published at Palermo