

While preparing a domestic goose for the table one day last week, Mrs. J. A. H. Winsloe noticed numerous white and unhealthy looking spots upon its lungs, heart and liver. She called Mr. Winsloe and on investigation he decided the goose had been seriously infected with tuberculosis germs, and which diagnosis proved correct. The effected parts were taken to the Cooperstown Drug Co., where they are preserved in alcohol and on exhibition. The spotted tubercular portions are plainly visible and the exhibit has attracted considerable attention.—Sentinel Courier.
