

The home talent play, "The Corner Store," presented at the opera house last Friday evening, was a success in every way. It was necessary to place planks in the aisles for seats in order to accommodate the large crowd. The receipts of the play was $120, and added to this amount is about $20, collected from the dance. Deducting all expenses, a balance of $75 was turned into the baseball treasury. The players handled their parts remarkably well, scarcely a slip being made in the entire performance, and judging from the outbursts of applause and the intense interest displayed in the startling situations, the play proved very popular and captivating. The specialties introduced between acts were good and heartily applauded.
