Monday's passenger was stuck in the snow in a cut east of Jessie and arrived in Binford about six hours late. We experienced a real touch of winter on that day, and people commenced to realize for the first time this season the pinch of the hard coal situation. The weather has moderated a little since Monday, but the farmers have practically given up hope of doing any more fall plowing. The dry condition of the soil earlier in the season which made plowing impractical and the early freeze-up leaves many farmers with a big job on their hands next spring.
