

Mrs. B. Hoffman was very painfully injured last Thursday afternoon as the result of an encounter with a hive of angry bees. The bees had swarmed and alighted in a tree in the yard and Mrs. Hoffman noticing them, went out to shake them down and return them to the hive. When shaking the tree a number of them alighted upon various parts of her body, stinging her frightfully—more than a dozen of them stinging her on one arm. She became very ill, but phoned for medical assistance which arrived shortly and found her in a bad way. Prompt action was taken to combat the poison of the bee stings, but for a time her condition was considered serious. She quickly rallied, however, and soon began to grow better, and now has almost entirely recovered from her painful experience. The sting of angry bees oft times proves fatal, and Mrs. Hoffman is to be congratulated upon her fortunate escape.—Sentinel-Courier.
