

wrong?

Anyhow, we're here, so it's too late to argue, because they can't leave us boys in the lurch who come over here to fight for them. They got to back us up, to the last man and dollar if we need same. And if we are willing to fight for them what stays at home, why, surely, they got the guts to work and stand shoulder to shoulder till we mop up with the Kaiser and Hindenburg. And then we'll go back to the U. S. to the tune of Auld Lang Syne.

There's a figure of Christ on the cross at the end of this street. They have got them all over France, at the crossroads and on the hills. And coming in from drill this evening I got to wondering what he thought about all this.

Well, here comes the native down the street with his team of one horse and one ox—and I know what that means. It means another day is done in France.
