

in the study of birds.

Ben Killeran accompanied the Cooperstown bowling team as a body guard on their trip to Binford last Thursday, and stood by them until the result of the first game became known, when it was plainly evident that they were doomed to ignominious defeat—and then Ben beat it out of the hall swearing vengeance on some one in Binford. He must have reasoned that a good one to start on was the Times scribe in order to even up some old base ball sores—you see, that still sticks in Cooper's crop—and on the pretense of giving us a "lift" in turning out our weekly luminary, he proceeded to pester the life out us, tear up the paper, run 'em in the rollers, and various other things of a pestiferous nature. Ben got even, all right, but there's another day coming.
