Albert Lonson, formerly employed in the bank at Pekin, was one of the perpetrators in a good joke played on the Commercial club at Theif River Falls on a recent market day held there. As an added attraction the club had a public marriage which was witnessed by about two thousand people. The whole affair now turns out to have been a huge joke on the Commercial Club and the spectators who did the honor to the occasion. It has been revealed that the "young lady" in the case was none other than Albert Lonson of that city. He is assistant cashier of the First State Bank and a prominent young man of that city. The bridal couple were recipients of many presents from the business men of the city.
