

in hell made the Kaiser?

Hannaford Enterprise: W. D. Sinclair had a narrow escape from being run into by the branch passenger train last Saturday. He was walking along the depot platform away from the train and stepped off the end of the platform and onto the track to cross it to go home for dinner. Just as he stepped onto the track the engine was right on him, and it was only by grabbing hold of the front of the engine that he was able to save himself from injury. Fortunately at that point the train was almost at a standstill, so he was able to extricate himself from his dangerous position without any injury.
