

Cat and Dog Stage Freak

Wimbledon News: To the many curiosities vying for first place as the eighth wonder of the world a new rival has been discovered, near Wimbledon, which in the opinion of the discoverers, will make all other claimants fade into oblivion. In this case the object of wonderment is not a freakish creature—a dog and a cat standing, facing each other in a fighting attitude, apparently a determined stand after a bitter chase, their wide open eyes wild with rage, the cat's tail bushy, back bristled and mouth open as if just ready to lead another charge. In that position they became paralyzed with cold and finally froze rigid.

At least this is the attitude in which they were discovered last Saturday. J. E. Fox and Louis Altringer of Wimbledon, while driving across a field to avoid a bad piece of road near Ivar Skaar's place eight miles north of town, made the discovery. Struck by the singularity
