Near Finley last Saturday while fooling with an (empty of course) 32-calibre revolver, in the hands of a 12-year old lad, the measly old thing went off and struck Clark Borgardus in the neck near the Adam's apple, and where the bullet went nobody knows to this day. There is a small round hole where it entered the neck, but no second hole where it came out. At the time, blood flowed freely but Mr. Borgardus has at no time suffered pain. Now the question arises where did the bullet go? Is it still lodged in some fleshy portion of the neck; or has it passed into the stomach; or was the shot a glancing one, and is the chunk of lead now buried in the side of the house, where the accident occurred? Dr. Stephenson was called, but was unable to locate the ball. If Mr. Borgardus continues to improve in the future as rapidly as at present, an X-Ray should be procured and the building examined, to ascertain if it is suffering much pain.
