

In the words of Johnathan Beeswax: The devil has had a little more work thrown on his shoulders this week than usual owing to the fact that the Editor got into a little difficulty with County Judge Warrey the first part of the week. This Warrey, it seems, has chronic attacks of combativeness on the brain and while he was in The Pioneer office last Monday afternoon he was suddenly taken with an attack of his favorite disease and he jumped onto the Editor and pried his form, busted his cornucopia and put little dots, dashes, hyphens and full stops all over his body. The Editor's right eye is in a state of coma at present, but those who have seen it think it will come out all right, although the Editor thinks the chances of its coming out are not as good now as they were when Warrey had his thumb in it. The chances are pretty good of having this matter aired through the courts and we trust everybody will receive justice. Its no small offence for a man to come into a newspaper office and jump onto the moulder of public opinion and jolt his political opinions up with his religious beliefs. Especially when there is an eye witness to the whole affair.
