

Another use for a gasoline engine on the farm is found by W. B. Larratt, of Sykeston. He took the blower on an old separator and mounted it on a truck, and running it by a gasoline engine, filled his barn with hay. He also expects to stack hay with a blower and elevate grain into his granary.