

Eskil Olson had but little difficulty defeating Garfield Klinefellow in the wrestling match held at the fire hall Monday evening. Olson won the first fall after twelve minutes of hard wrestling and lost the second to Klinefellow in 11 minutes; but to demonstrate his superiority he tore into his man the third fall and succeeded in throwing him after six minutes of fast work. The match was exciting from start to finish, the men putting up a good exhibition and Olson especially showed himself to be familiar with all the fine points of the game. Olson's challenge to meet anyone in this vicinity was accepted by George Lewanskofki and a match was arranged, the date as yet not being announced.
