

The writer visited the farm of William Reid the first of the week where Mr. Reid is cutting wheat east of his residence. He is experiencing much difficulty in harvesting the crop for the reason that it is so uneven, some places amounting to nothing while in the next few yards it looks as though it might yield 40 bushels to the acre. The men who drive the binders this year are not having a snap by any means as it requires a good deal of work and energy to regulate the machine to gather the grain under the varying conditions. Mr. Reid showed us thru his garden which is fine for this season of the year and then we were entertained by several lectures by William Jennings Bryan, delivered by the phonograph. Mr. Reid is a royal entertainer and seems to enjoy life as he goes along and all that he seems to lack is a good wife to share with him the abundance of good things which he has provided.
