

Mrs. Knud Christenson was quite badly burned about the face and neck yesterday. She was preparing dinner and had a kettle of beans on the stove boiling and when she went to lift the cover of the kettle, it had become so tight that a quantity of steam had gathered which when the cover was loosened, hurled the contents of the kettle out and spattered it all over Mrs. Christenson's face and neck. Burns of this kind are very painful and she will have to stay in for awhile.
