

The writer is in receipt of a letter from H. J. Murphy who is now located at Edmonton, Alberta. Among other things he says: "We are settled and happy and well and prosperous. Am doing nicely, making good money and like the country and town. It is a real city about the size of Fargo, and very pretty. We are thinking of going to the coast when the cold weather comes on and stay for the winter. Will go to Vancouver and take a boat from there to lower California."