

John H. Reid was somewhat delayed in getting to his home in Virginia on account of a defective car in which he had his goods and they had to be reloaded at St. Paul, necessitating his remaining there several days. But a card from Charles Eagles brought the news that they had reached Chicago and were getting along all right.