

A. H. Robinson and the family narrowly escaped serious injury on Thursday evening while returning from the races. In some way the pole dropped out of the neckyoke and the horses became frightened and tried to run away. The pole was broken and the rig turned over, throwing all the occupants to the ground, but as luck would have it none of them received serious injury. One of the little girls lost her hat and later it was placed under one of the seats of the rig and when they went to get it someone had taken it. Mr. Robinson did not think he had any neighbors who are mean enough to steal a little girl's hat, but he is forced to believe it now.
