

C. J. and Andrew Syvertson departed on Monday for the west where they expect to engage in some kind of business as soon they can find anything to their liking. They went by the way of St. Paul to take advantage of the cheap rates being offered from that city and will go to Idaho and then further west if they do not find anything there. They have been engaged in the clothing and dry goods business in Courtenay for a number of years but, the close confinement did not agree with them and they will now seek a business that will require a good deal of out door work. The people of Courtenay regret to have men of this stamp leave the town but wish them the best of success in whatever they may engage. John Syvertson will probably remain here during the winter and will join his brothers in the spring.
