

Escaped Death

Fargo, N. D., Feb. 21. —It is doubtless a fine plan to watch the main line for trains at railroad crossings, but there is one man in Fargo who isn't going to stand on a side track in the future, not if he knows it. As a result of the cool-headedness of Margaret Berkmeir, an employe in the manufacturing department of Joseph & Hoenck, this same man owes his life.

The man, whose name could not be learned, stood on a side track at the Broadway crossing of the N. P. His entire attention was given to a passenger train approaching from the west on the main line.

In the meantime a string of box cars were being backed down on the side track from the east. Miss Berkmier yelled to the man to watch out, but he apparently did not realize the situation. With the cars only a yard or so away, the girl grabbed the man and fairly dragged him from his perilous place. All he could do was pour thanks on the one who saved his life.
