

PECULIAR CASE

MAN DEPORTED FROM CANADA
HAS VALUABLE HOMESTEAD
THERE.

Carrington, N. D., Jan. 31.—

After serving six months in a Canadian prison for alleged horse stealing, then being deported by the Canadian authorities, Jake Gilbertson landed in Carrington penniless and with hardly enough clothing to protect him from the cold. Gilbertson, who formerly resided here, went to Canada two years ago and filed upon a claim, and his family is still there. The matter is being taken up with the Canadian authorities for settlement.

Last summer a bunch of horses came to the Gilbertson homestead, driven there to shelter from the prairie. He kept them about the place several days, expecting that the owners would soon come. Gilbertson was ignorant of the law requiring advertising. Some time later one of the mounted police arrested him on a charge of stealing the horses, and in the court at Lethbridge he was convicted and sentenced to six months. As the time for the expiration of his sentence arrived several days ago, he was ordered to prepare for a trip. He was then taken to Portal, N. D., where a ticket to Carrington was given him, he being ordered to go there and never return to Canada. As he had made big improvements on his claim, and as his family still are living there, the complications arising are rather peculiar, and some interesting developments are expected.
