

Three potatoes were brought to our office Monday which were about the biggest tubers we have seen for many days. They weighed exactly six pounds and six ounces or over two pounds each. Each tuber is large enough for meal for an average family and about eight hundred of this kind would settle the potato question for a family for a year. They were raised on the farm of Sam Lilley and he states he has about 150 bushels of nearly the same size. Who says we can't raise potatoes in North Dakota?
