

Herman Lundi has accepted a position with the Courtenay Mercantile company. He was formerly engaged in the general merchandise business at Edmunds but found it a very unprofitable location on account of a prevailing disease in epidemical form that pervaded that community the technical name of which is commonly called Wardicitis and Robukicitis. It's victims usually last about a year before they are compelled to succumb to it's ravages. Mr. Lundi expects to move his family up from Jamestown where they live at present, as soon as he can secure a suitable dwelling house.
