This is generally the season for early fish stories. As we can't boast of any stories of this kind here we will give you a gopher story that is a perfectly true one. C. L. McCumber, of Marstonmoor, was in town Monday with $12 worth of gopher tails and showed the writer a small tobacco pouch that contained 983 grains of wheat and 22 grains of oats that he had taken from the jaws of one gopher he had killed. He saw the little pest at a grain sack and shot it. When he examined the gopher he was surprised at the amount of grain it held in its jaws and counted the same with the above result. This makes a pretty fair load for one small gopher to pack away and shows the amount of damage a bunch of them can do in a grain field when they get started. — Medina Citizen.
